I don't think so. My students have come to me with questions about Java. They ask how to warm up. They are wondering where they should start. Well, believe it or not, they won't understand Java the language if they haven't mastered the basics. Let's warm up together! Most things in Java are straightforward. Learning Java is like learning a foreign language. Students learn Java the same way they learn any other language. Each word is a sentence. Each sentence has components. Each component has vocabulary, grammar, and semantics. A student can learn a language without knowing all the vocabulary. This is how foreign languages are learned. Students need to learn the grammar to understand the vocabulary and the semantics to understand the meaning. Most of the words students need to know for Java have little or no meaning other than the concepts they represent. If students master the concepts in this book they'll be far better prepared to learn the specifics and the vocabulary needed to understand Java.
