'This is a message to all Jews,' as a pair of have-not siblings got into a barroom argument about money. A pair of siblings got into a verbal argument about money at a Manhattan bar, turning the tense situation into an incredible piece of comedy. Kiran Gupta and his brother, Richard, along with his girlfriend Hannah, had spent several weeks traveling around India, visiting Buddhist monasteries. Gupta, 28, said he and his brother had just left one of the monasteries in Varanasi when a row broke out over the two men's inability to find a job in the United States. Scroll down for video Kiran Gupta and his brother Richard, along with their girlfriend Hannah, got into a verbal argument at a Manhattan bar about money Richard had a look of disbelief on his face, as he listened to his brother go through his financial woes. Gupta said that he was raised to have a healthy amount of skepticism when dealing with people. So when his brother, who has had a brain injury and is less educated than Gupta, told him how much money he needed to pay in order to immigrate to the U.S., he was taken aback. 'His English was really bad, I had no idea what he was saying,' Gupta, who is a native of India, told DailyMail.com. 'I was looking at him and then I was looking at my girlfriend and then I was looking at his girlfriend. I was like, "What the f are you talking about?" 'He says, "I need $5,000." I was like, "OK. OK." I didn't have any. 'I said, "What?" and he's like, "I need $5,000 for a visa." And then I was like, "Oh. That's fine. That's totally fine," I don't have any of that. And then he was like, "Well, $10,

"This is a living human being and it was not for cosmetic purposes, and if she was abandoned, she was abandoned at birth," Peter Cherubim, the manager of the group of people who took in Lily and started a Facebook group named Abandoned Babies UK, told CBN News. By the end of September, Cherubim's Facebook page had received over 5,000 new members. The group has had to take turns to accommodate the barrage of new posts. "It's quite hard. We don't even have enough members to take calls from [people who want to adopt] babies. The whole group is under huge stress," Cherubim told CBN News. "I don't know how we can take her. We cannot, unless someone else takes her." Mum-of-three Chrissie White, 31, who adopted Lily, agreed. "I just don't think I can take on another child at this stage in my life," she said. "Lily is the love of my life, and she'd be the only one that would be with me forever. I just want to be surrounded by family." In a statement released by the Metropolitan Police on September 28, the department confirmed that they were investigating if the woman who gave birth to Lily was a victim of modern slavery. If the report is positive, it is the first case of this nature the police have encountered in the U.K. The Metropolitan Police's report on the case can be found here. If the woman's parents are found to be exploiting her, a charge of slavery could be laid. The woman can then seek asylum in the U.K. and be freed from potential deportation. Cherubim, however, pointed out that the woman was not a victim of modern slavery. "The person who did this is not a victim of modern slavery. It is not someone who had a bad experience at home and now she has 4bc0debe42
