download for free.Q: Spring Boot REST Reponse entity I am using Spring Boot to create a REST service to handle some data from a 3rd party API, and I would like to create a class to receive and print the response

as follows: @RestController

@RequestMapping(path =
    "/api/storedata/content", value =
   ("/{media_id}/{content}") public class

```
    StoredataController { ...

@GetMapping("/{media_id}/{content}")

```
    public Storedata

```
    showStoredata(@PathVariable(value =
        "media_id") String mediaId,

    @PathVariable(value = "content") String content) { Storedata result = new Storedata();
    result.setMediaId(mediaId);

    result.setContent(content); return result; } }

My Storedata class would look something like this: public class Storedata { private String mediaId; private String content; public Storedata() { } ... } Is this a good way to model this class to be consumed via the REST API?

A: Yes, it is. It conforms to the RAR (REpresentational State Transfer) REST protocol. In other words, the representation of the data doesn't change. That includes the method you use to return the data (get, post, put, or delete)
