I think this sentence should be correct: He criticized the books in the store. but when I search in google, there is a lot of result like He criticized the books My question: Is it wrong to use "the" when describing that a book is discussed and "the books" (singular) is defined (means that a person criticized 1 book of those many books)? A: As already commented by @JeremyFletch, the books in the store, refers to the whole collection of books in the store. You can use the plural (the books), or you can use the singular (book) to indicate a single book. Another case for a single book is (for an informal context), when you use the singular book and the plural books to refer to the different pages in a book: I was reading a good book yesterday. It's on page 22 of this one. I was reading a good book yesterday. It's on page 24 of these two books. The NFL Draft is just a few days away and currently the spotlight is on whom the Cincinnati Bengals will pick with the sixth overall selection. The 2019 edition of the NFL Draft will begin with the highly anticipated first round on Thursday, April 25. The draft kicks off at 8 p.m. EST and will air live on NFL Network. • KING: Breaking down draft buzz, landing spots The Bengals are pretty well set at the quarterback position with Joe Burrow and Jake Fromm both in the mix. But who's the best running back prospect in this year's draft class? That would be Sony Michel. Michel was a two-time All-American at Georgia and put up great numbers during his four-year career, racking up over 4,000 yards from scrimmage. In 2018, Michel had 1,030 rushing yards and nine touchdowns. The former college football All-American was named the SEC
