Ragnar Torel Ragnar Torel (born September 27, 1973) is a Norwegian serial killer who raped and murdered at least seven women between 1993 and 1995. He was incarcerated in Nord-Trøndelag for murdering a woman in 1992. Early life Ragnar Torel was born on September 27, 1973 to a family of Russian ancestry in Mellemøy, Sør-Trøndelag. He was adopted by his mother and stepfather shortly after his birth, and grew up in a modest house at Mellemøya, and attended the local middle school. He was a good student, but was always ostracized by his classmates due to his odd appearance. He was overweight throughout his childhood. Use the Mouse to Control the Pen.. Art: J. Brusselle.Q: Disable keyboard shortcuts in Javascript I'm writing a module which is running as a special process in Delphi 2007. It needs to have keyboard shortcuts enabled so that the users can trigger it's actions from the keyboard. I'm using the LowLevelHook functions, however, the problem is, when I enable the keyboard shortcuts, I can't use the function I have written. Is there anyway I can disable the keyboard shortcuts? A: There are several ways of doing this: Grab the keydown and keyup events on the document. If you don't see those, either the browser doesn't allow DOM methods or you must be using some more obscure browser. In either case, you can configure the browser to catch input. Don't use keyboard shortcuts. Depending on the keyboard shortcut, it will be bound to a script or an XSLT stylesheet. You could have your app start and detect the keyboard shortcut key. If the shortcut is properly bound to the XSLT then you can do that XSLT and ignore the event. If it is bound to a script, you could use XSLT or the DOM methods to disable it. Hook up keydown and keyup events and force preventDefault. I don't recommend this as it's a possible attack vector, but it works. In the event handler, check if the event was a keyboard shortcut and if so set it to false.
