1) Why didn't you make motion capture technology your very first feature? We knew we had to have players, and we knew that motion capture was the best way to capture all of the intricacies of these athletes. But it didn't become a priority until we knew that our first-person game engine would be made by us. 2) Why are you using motion capture for FIFA, and not video? We have always used technology that captures motion, and we wanted a motion-capture technology that was easy for us to implement into the game. Our new engine is designed to be easily modified, meaning that if we need to make a small change to the game, we can do it in real time. Because this technology is relatively new, it's not always up to speed. This is why we focused on having a quick turnaround time with this technology to ensure that we would be ready for when the technology became better. 3) How do you capture the data from the players? In the past, when we had players, we would capture the movements of each individual player from separate input devices. With the data collection technology in Fifa 22 Crack, you can capture the movements of 22 players in motion. 4) Why are you capturing 22 players' movements, instead of one? The traditional method for data collection is through 12 to 14 players, so we wanted a high degree of accuracy when capturing the motions. But we also knew that when playing football, there is a lot of space in the pitch, and 22 players allows us to create the most natural gameplay, while still capturing the details of the motions. If we focused on just one player, that player may have a movement that is a little different than the others, thus creating unnatural gameplay. 5) Is that data being monitored and used later in the game? In the past, if a player was having a bad game, it would be assumed that it was a blip, and the data would be ignored. With this technology, we can see exactly what the player is doing so we can adjust the game play and then make sure that player realizes what has changed and that he can do it again. 6) What kind of matches are you capturing for this data? Players will be doing intense actions during a match, like full-on tackles, goal celebration and more. 7) How will you use the data? We have created an AI that is capable of
