Measuring the impact of mental health promotion projects. The authors show how, under ethical restrictions common to evaluation studies, it is possible to measure the impact of an intervention on mental health promotion using a relatively low-cost generic measure of mental health. One hundred six adolescents were randomly assigned to a mental health promotion intervention or a wait-list control, and followed up after 6 months. Multivariate analysis of mean change scores and latent change scores from the generic measures of mental health showed that the intervention was successful in changing knowledge, attitudes, and behaviors related to mental health.

When all is said and done, maybe he's not so bad. As a player, he ain't terrible. He seems like a pretty chill guy. I wonder if he'd feel welcome here. FIFA is a popular series of sports games developed and published by EA. It is all about player development and management, and the player-coach interaction. Most of the time you are in a virtual pub, giving your players, and trying to train them, and sometimes also to play some computer or human game. It can be used in various ways and is thus also used in school lessons. It is used to teach, to teach how football (soccer) should be played, how it should be played in real life. The game therefore contains a lot of real life information. Who is FIFA? Since I have recently started playing FIFA, my questions are most definitely not about football, but I think I do like the soccer on which the game is based on. Therefore I wonder if you might think that your audience also does not understand what FIFA is about. FIFA is not a "shoot-em-up" game, nor is it a "first-person-shooter". It is about strategy. Soccer on which the game is based on. But since a lot of people do not understand that, it is perhaps not the best game to explain football. Therefore we at Euroworld.ch have decided to present the game in a slightly more user friendly way. As soon as I heard that it is just a game, I have to admit that I was a little bit disappointed. Yes, it is basically just about training your player(s) and watching how they perform in a range of computer games and tournaments. And yes, it looks a bit alike how it would be in real life. So, after an introduction, I could take the first steps into the game right away. But the explanations in the manual are not quite helping. As the game is all about coaching and developing players, it is best to start with the Manager mode. But this is not the start of the game, but the end of the tutorial. With that mode you only enter the virtual pub and you do not have any goal. This mode is to train your team(s) and learn how to manage your team(s). It is quite a bit like the tutorial mode in later PS2 games, such as PES 2003. If you stop the tutorial and play it the other way around, then it gets a bit more serious and you play some real matches against other teams. This is also about learning the game, and you do not have any goals to achieve
